FEDERAL.

SWISS AND THE LEAGUE.

A proposal is being circulated in Switzerland to amend the Swiss Constitution in the direction of restoring the complete neutrality of the Confederation as it existed in 1914. To this end it is proposed to launch an appeal to the country in the form of an "initiative." Support for this is being canvassed by a group of influential politicians, apparently with some success. In the event of its being adopted Switzerland would be absolved from participation in any kind of "sanctions," whether military or economic, against a country violating the Covenant of the League.

The position of Switzerland in the League is already peculiar. In 1920, when the question arose whether Switzerland should or should not join the League, a strong minority was opposed to this step, as being a break with the age-long Swiss tradition of neutrality. Membership of the League was finally accepted only under conditions and with great reluctance. Switzerland recognized the duties of solidarity imposed by membership of the League, including co-operation in economic and financial "sanctions" against a Covenant-breaking State, and undertook to make every sacrifice to defend her own territory in every circumstance. But she was absolved from taking part in any military action or from allowing the passage of foreign troops or the preparation of military operations within her territory. It implied that Switzerland had abandoned her economic but not her military neutrality.

At the time the view prevailed that in practice the distinction would prove purely theoretical, because the imposition of "sanctions" was certain to bring military action in its train. It was realized, when the economic "sanctions" were imposed during the Italo-Abyssinian war, that the situation in Switzerland had become extremely delicate. The Swiss Federal Council then took occasion to declare that the fulfilment of obligations under the Covenant must be understood to be within its own sovereignty and within the limits of its own neutrality. Switzerland escaped then being drawn into a conflict, but those who are promoting the present "initiative" consider that the distinction between economic and military "sanctions" is based on a fallacy and threatens to draw Switzerland into conflicts between other States.

The amendment, if adopted, would be inconsistent with Switzerland's obligations under the Covenant and would almost certainly involve withdrawal from the League. A considerable body of opinion is opposed to the change on the ground that on balance Switzerland stands to gain by League membership.

 By an "initiative" a person or persons outside the Legislature may introduce legislation.

INTERNATIONAL MATCH.

Hungary 2 Switzerland 0

This match was played at Budapest before a mere 10,000 spectators, the poor attendance being due to inclement weather, snow falling continuously throughout the day. Once again we find ourselves on the losing side. Our team was the same as against Italy in Geneva, with the exception of the two wing forwards, where the injured Bickel and Amado were replaced by G. Aebi and Weber. Considering the present playing strength of Hungary who defeated a few weeks ago Czechoslovakia by no less than 8 goals to 3, the result does not disgrace little Switzerland. In fact, the team played quite well. The chief trouble remains the forward line, where we have quite a number of clever players available whose chief fault, however, is, lack of confidence to apply the final touch! They one and all seem to shirk that final responsibility for "having a go" at goal and instead of shooting prefer to pass the ball to a colleague who, in turn, seems to say "thank you very much, but I would rather not either." Once they get rid of this inferiority complex we really should have a team of which to be proud.

The first goal fell in the 3rd minute, scored by Dr. Sarosi, Hungary's renowned centre forward, the other in the 30th minute of the second half, when a corner led to a scramble in front of our goal and Toldi, inside left, shot past Bizzozzero. Our eleven had their best moments after the interval.

Are we downhearted? Not a bit of it!
