THE PASSING OF KING GEORGE VI

Though God has raised me high, yet this I count the glory of my crown, that I have reigned with their love.

THE British Commonwealth and Empire mourns the passing of its Sovereign, and of a man whose sterling character, kindly personality and broad humanity had made him beloved by all his subjects and respected far beyond the borders of his Empire.

Grief knows no boundaries. The sorrow of one member of the human family is the sorrow of all, and it is in that spirit, that the Swiss Colony in Great Britain, expresses its deepest sympathy to Her Majesty Queen Elizabeth II, and the Royal family.

We, who have spent the major portion of our lives in these islands, and have shared both joy and sorrow, as well as hardship with this great nation owe our loyalty to two countries, and there is no loss nor shame in this division. Our loyalty to our native country can never die, but our loyalty to our adopted country grows with the years we reside here; they do not conflict, but are a complement.

Through the critical times of the late King's illness, we shared the anxieties of his people, and now they deplore his grievous and untimely loss, we too mourn the passing not only of a good and dutiful monarch, but of a good and wise man.

King George the VI was born at York Cottage, Sandringham, on December 14th, 1895, the second son of the Duke and Duchess of York. The young Prince with his elder brother, young sister, and three younger brothers led in his childhood a life of simplicity and happiness.

For at least two generations it has been a tradition in the Royal Family that the second son should go into the Navy. Accordingly, Prince Albert, as he then was entered at the Royal Naval College Osborne in January, 1909. From Osborne he went to Dartmouth. Passing out from Dartmouth at the end of 1912 he went in January of the following year on a training cruise in H.M.S. Cumberland, spending six months in the West Atlantic, later on he was appointed as a midshipman to H.M.S. Collingwood and he was serving in this ship when war broke out in 1914, in September of that year he had to be hurriedly operated on for appendicitis and could not return to duty till February 1915. He was again at sea in May, 1916, just in time to experience active service at Jutland.

In the following September he was finally invalided from the Navy. Throughout the spring of 1918 he was given training in flying. He was given his wings and in this branch of the fighting services the future King took much pride and showed great proficiency.

In October, 1919, at the age of 24, the Prince went up to Cambridge. The following year his father's old dukedom of York was revived in his favour and he took his seat in the House of Lords.

At the beginning of 1923 came the welcome news of the Duke's betrothal to Lady Elizabeth Bowes-Lyon, youngest daughter of the fourteenth Earl of Strathmore, and the marriage was solemnized in April of that year. Three years after marriage Princess Elizabeth was born, and in 1930, the Duchess of York gave birth to Princess Margaret.

On the Abdication of Edward VIII he was called to the Throne. On May, 12th, 1937, George VI was crowned King at Westminster Abbey. The following year the King and Queen paid a visit to France and in the spring of 1939 their Majesties sailed from Portsmouth for Canada and the U.S.A.

During his absence, events in Europe grew steadily worse, and the menace turned to reality. On the first night of the war the King broadcast "We are called", he said, "to meet the challenge of a principle which if it were to prevail would be fatal to any civilised order in the world", and he asked his people to stand "calm, firm, and united in their time of trial".

Thus the long drawn years of war ran down, and the closing month of the struggle saw the King sharing with his people the final ingenuity of the enemy in the shape of rocket and flying bomb.

In 1947, the King and Queen, accompanied by the Princesses embarked on a visit to South Africa. Two great ceremonies marked the following spring. On St. Georges Day the 600th anniversary of the Order of the Garter was marked by a Chapter and a service of great splendour in St. George's Chapel, Windsor. Three days later, on April 26th he and the Queen celebrated their 25th wedding anniversary. One of the last functions was the opening of the 1951 Festival.
