On 27th May the Swiss electorate rejected by a big majority a Federal Government proposal to raise the daily allowance of Members of Parliament from Fr.65.— to Fr.100.—. Considering that they have to pay for travelling and accommodation out of their allowances, they rarely have more than about Fr.3,000.— left over at the end of the annual Parliamentary Sessions. The polling result showed, however, that the public had no sympathy with their grievance and considered an increase untimely when a national wages pause was being called for.

On the other hand, the electorate voted for a proposal for the addition of new articles to the Constitution, enabling the Government to grant more subsidies for restoration work and for the purchase of land and houses in order to preserve nature and historical monuments.
