A DIFFERENT POSTAUTO

Peter Keating

Three axle Setra at Olivone.

Prior to this year I had travelled by Post Autos over the majority of the Alpine Passes in Switzerland and all the routes were operated by the Swiss Post. A pass that I had not travelled over until last July was the Lukmanier Pass in an area of the country not frequented by too many tourists. I could see from the Kursbuch that from my base at Filisur it was possible to do the convoluted journey in a day. The first leg was by RhB train to Thusis, then a PostAuto through the tunnel under the Passo di San Bernadino to Bellinzona, an SBB train to Biasca and by PostAuto from there over the Lukmanier Pass to return from Disentis, via Chur, on the RhB. The route over the pass starts from Olivone in the Ticino and naturally I expected a PostAuto operated by Swiss Post to take me to Olivone where I could see from the Kursbuch a connecting service would take me to the summit of the Pass, where there was a short break with another change of vehicle, before descending to Disentis. Waiting at the due time Biasca Stazione I was surprised when a Setra of Autolinee Bleniesi (based in the town) arrived for the journey to Olivone, a remote community of less than 1000 people some 900m high at the head of the Val Blenio. Until its closure in 1973 the 13.8km metre-gauge Biasca Acquarossa- Comprovasco railway, opened in 1911, ran along the lower section of this valley. Its route is now a cycle path. Following a seven-minute change at Olivone Posta I joined another vehicle operated by the same company for the 30 minute climb up the Valle Santa Maria to the 1916m summit of the Lukmanier Pass/Passo del Lucomagno. Here, on the cantonal boundary between Ticino and Graubünden amidst the bleak scenery of the high alps and next to the head of a large lake formed by the damming of the valley, I changed to the connecting PostAuto. This service descended 800m in some 20km down the Val Medel to Disentis and my train back to Chur and Filisur. The route over the Lukmanier Pass, although important in mediaeval times and once touted as a rival to the Gotthard by 19thC railway planners, is no longer a strategic one and the five daily PostAuto connections only operate from mid-June to mid-October, whilst the road is not always passable in winter. ☑

AND FINALLY...

Robin Sherwood asks: Do you know the Engstlenalp?

One of my favourite haunts is an almost inaccessible, but unforgettable, alpine valley, reached four times a day by PostAuto (CHF15 Alpine Supplement applies) from Meiringen, which ends, after winding slowly for 50 minutes up a narrow mountain road with lots of romantic Pee-Pa-Po hooting at the Engstlenalp. This is a true Alp - a kilometre-wide high meadow at 1834m where Wanderwege lead off in various directions. My favourite is the easy one that goes along the shore of the Engstlensee. It is in fact a thousand-year-old mule track, the original trade route between Engelberg, with its wealthy monastery, the Grimsel and onward into Italy. There is the excellent historic Engstlenalp Hotel - Rösti is recommended - where the PostAuto route terminates, and the path to the lake and the Joch Pass to Engelberg go off behind it. Watch out for marmots: they are here in profusion, but difficult to spot. Away to the northwest is the steeply climbing cliff path to Melchsee-Frutt and Planplatten (Hasliberg) over the Balmeregg, but this needs fitness and a head for heights. You need to
