Maurizio Lazzarato, «Immaterial Labor», in: Paolo Virno and Michael Hardt (eds.), «Radical Thought in Italy: a Potential Politics», Minneapolis 1996, p. 136: «The organization of the cycle of production of immaterial labor (because this is exactly what it is, once we abandon our factoryist prejudices—a cycle of production) is not obviously apparent to the eye, because it is not defined by the four walls of a factory. The location in which it operates is outside in the society at large, at a territorial level that we could call «the basin of immaterial labor». Small and sometimes very small «productive units» (often consisting of only one individual) are organized for specific ad hoc projects, and may exist only for the duration of those particular jobs.»

Ibid., pp. 132-133: «On the other hand, as regards the activity that produces the «cultural content» of the commodity, immaterial labor involves a series of activities that are not normally recognized as «work»—in other words, the kinds of activities involved in defining and fixing cultural and artistic standards, fashions, tastes, consumer norms, and, more strategically, public opinion. Once the privileged domain of the bourgeoisie and its children, these activities have since the end of the 1970s become the domain of what we have come to define as «mass intellectuality».»

Ibid., p. 135: «The management mandate to become «subjects of communication» threatens to be even more totalitarian than the earlier rigid division between mental and manual labor (ideas and execution), because capitalism seeks to involve even the worker's personality and subjectivity within the production of value. Capital wants a situation where command resides within the subject him- or herself.»

Ibid., p. 66: «If the autonomist refusal of work helped produce a society in which there is nothing but work, what strategies are left for us?»

Maurizio Lazzarato, «Immaterial Labor», in: Paolo Virno and Michael Hardt (eds.), «Radical Thought in Italy: a Potential Politics», Minneapolis 1996, p. 143: «The «author»

must lose its individual dimension and be transformed into an industrially organized production process (with a division of labor, investments, orders, and so forth), «reproduction» becomes a mass reproduction organized according to the imperatives of profitability, and the audience («reception») tends to become the consumer/communicator. In this process of socialization and subsumption within the economy of intellectual activity the «ideological» product tends to assume the form of a commodity.»
