12 «One of the essential ways of describing carnival focuses upon the ritual inversions which it habitually involves. [...] Carnival gives symbolic and ritual play, and active display, to the inmixing of the subject, to the heterodox, messy, excessive and unfinished informalities of the body and social life. It attacks the authority of the ego [...] and flaunts the material body as a pleasurable grotesquerie—protuberant, fat, disproportionate, open at its orifices».
