Winter Sports and Fashions

by MABEL ZUPPINGER

Winter sports fashions are as old as winter sports themselves. In early days they were, however, fashions that we would fain forget. Let us indeed forget the first Parisian « creations » which emphasized the « fashionable » rather than the sportive note and were likely to draw ridicule upon winter sports as such, until, at last, common sense prevailed. Sports costumes as they were worn in those far-off days seem to us to be utterly out-of-place. Every woman ski-runner wishes to look smart, and what is smartness but simplicity combined with utility?

Here in Switzerland the high mountains are, so to say, our next-door neighbours. They have often been called our most important export goods. It is, therefore, no wonder that both our fashion makers and our textile manufacturers, being on the spot, and having devoted years of careful study to the subject, should have acquired first-hand knowledge of the requirements of winter sports. They have an undisputed right to be looked upon as leaders in this branch of industries.

In the first case the materials must be of the very best, not only warm but also durable, as well as wind and rain proof. Besides these essential qualities it is also necessary that they should have an attractive and smart look. The results achieved both with regard to materials and style are most satisfactory. Sports outfits that were formerly the exclusive wear of experts are now worn by every average ski-runner. Although dark materials are still much in request, we find that the latest novelty is coarse-grained linen in white and écrù, since we go on skiing till after Easter! Whether the material used be linen, wool or gabardine, water runs off it as it does off a duck's back.

Even wind jackets, hitherto the dullest of dull garments, have now become quite exciting! They are made in the subtlest variety of shades, patterned with small checks or gay plaids. Stretchable knitted materials are let in in order to ensure a perfect fit, while hoods in contrasting colours form a pleasing accessory to almost every jacket. No matter whether we are about to go in for a swift downhill run, to practise on a nursery slope or to indulge in that most graceful pastime, skating, there is one thing we all wish, that is to look athletic, graceful and attractive! The fulfilment of all these wishes may be found in Swiss winter sports fashions.
