To suit all tastes

Women's tricot lingerie and wollen underwear

The Swiss knitting and hosiery industry, which is rather recent in origin, has developed rapidly during the last thirty years or so. More than a sixth (i.e. 215) of all Swiss clothing concerns manufacture knitted materials. Of these, approximately fifty perhaps * manufacture underwear, to which should be added a small number of firms making lingerie in charmeuse and jersey not knitted by themselves. During the last five years, Swiss exports of clothing and underwear of this kind — not including stockings and socks — have almost doubled, rising from 17.4 million to 33.7 million Swiss

* It is impossible to quote exact figures in this field without entering into complicated technical details which would be out of place in an article of this kind.

francs. But we intend to examine here only one specific section of this branch — that of underwear and lingerie — without moreover making any distinction between daytime lingerie and night-gowns or between the different manufacturing methods producing either knitted articles or those in which the material is treated like a fabric. For Swiss industry manufactures products to suit all tastes and while remaining faithful to the traditional types, does not in any way allow itself to lag behind in the field of novelties. As we have so often emphasised in these columns, it is to this it owes its versatility which is, moreover, a result of its particular structure : a production decentralized in a great number of concerns with varied manufacturing programmes, avoiding any tendency towards mass-production and employing a skilled staff accustomed to a high standard of workmanship.

Even in the normal ranges of articles, the Swiss underwear industry maintains this very high standard. It makes use of the latest advances in technique, uses yarns of deated wool that are shrinkproof and do not felt, as well as made mothproof by a special impregnation process, silky mercerized cottons that are shrinkproof and can be boiled, Helanca yarns, mixtures of nylon and pure silk, charmeuses of rayon or synthetic fibres.

The great progress recently achieved in the field of synthetic textiles has made it possible to create new articles. Finishing, first of all, makes its contribution in the form of treatments that improve the feel of knitted materials made of synthetic fibres, in the form of permanent pleating, or progress in dyeing and printing techniques which make possible new effects in colour and decoration. Then again, production itself is making rapid progress, perfecting existing fibres, creating new ones, giving new appearances to familiar ones and making new mixtures. We have already quoted mixed silk and nylon fibres and Helanca yarns. Let us also call attention to the use, in continuous filament form or spun yarns, of the fibres known as grilon, terylene, movil, orlon, dralon, etc. which we list here without any claim to completeness or absolute scientific exactitude.

The tensile strength of synthetic filaments has made it possible to manufacture materials which are not only very strong and hard-wearing, but also extremely elastic and above all amazingly light.

This was more than enough to give birth during recent years to a veritable flowering of lovely new models, the monopoly of which seemed to have been reserved up till then for hand-made luxury lingerie.
