Swiss Export Week

READY-TO-WEAR

These words sum up the main advantage offered to the general public by the clothing industry. Modern « wholesale couture » constitutes a way of dressing that corresponds to the trends of our day and age : speed, social need to be dressed according to certain standards (without sacrificing every possibility of individuality !), economy in the use of purchasing power, etc. These are the reasons for the increasing success of ready-to-wear clothing.

In the following pages we present a selection of recent models by Swiss manufacturers of high quality ready-to-wear clothing and knitwear and jersey. Most of these models are taken from the winter collections which will be shown this spring in Zurich to buyers from all over the world during the 28th Swiss Export Week (from May 28th to June 2nd, 1956), organised by the Exporters Association of the Swiss Clothing Industry. Readers of « Textiles Suisses » already know that this Export Week makes it possible to see within a very short time, at the respective manufacturers', the quintessence of the Swiss « ready-to-wear » collections, and that this is the best opportunity for making their purchases under the most favourable conditions.

28th May - 2nd June 1956

Women in Fashion

(Interviews by René Cadet.)

In the ready-to-wear industry, as in high fashion, it is usually a man who gives his name to a firm, or represents it to the public. And yet women, even when they are not actually the « boss », play an important role in the creation of fashions. We have no intention here of lauding the hidden merits of the « modelistes » and « premières », but we thought it not unfitting to render indirect homage to all women who play their part in the creation of fashions by speaking of a few of them. We therefore went to see some of the women in the Swiss high quality ready-to-wear industry who either contribute to the making of the collections or, on the other hand, cooperate in the management of the firm. The thumbnail sketches that follow are not intended to be complete, but rather a series of impressions gathered rapidly between two fittings, in the feverish atmosphere preceding the presentation of the collections.

Miss R. Cafader of the firm of R. Cafader & Co. in Zurich, joined the ranks of ready-to-wear manufacturers because, while still quite young, she had decided that that was what she wanted to do. She therefore started with a thorough apprenticeship in dressmaking, then in 1935 she went to Paris where she worked for a year in the fashion house of Bruyère. There she rose through all the ranks of the hierarchy, from « petite main » to second saleswoman. Then, while still in Paris, she took courses in cut and fashion designing. Next, she went to London where she worked for a year before returning to Switzerland and spending several years as a « modeliste » in the Swiss clothing industry. Ten years ago, she started up the firm of Cafader & Co. with her brother, a textile engineer. The four seamstresses they started with have now increased to between eighty and a hundred ; this is eloquent proof of the progress made.

Miss Cafader chooses her fabrics with her brother and only considers the very best. She designs her models in the evening after working hours, because during the day she is too busy dealing with details of organisation ; she designs her dresses from the fabrics, drawing her inspiration from the material. Her preference is for youthful models. How does she spend her leisure time ? Her favourite relaxation is skiing, but her real hobby is her work. So much so in fact that she takes the trouble to check each dress herself before it leaves the factory. This trait is typical of the character of Miss Cafader, who never leaves anything to chance. Her whole person, her entire career, show the willpower, the calm decision which combined with boldness and great skill make her finished creations minor works of art.

R. Cafader.

Hilde Haller

A totally different atmosphere reigns at Mrs. Hilde Haller's of the firm of H. Haller & Co. in Zurich—a different personality, different methods. Mrs. Haller approached her profession from the artistic side. But do not jump to the conclusion that she is a dilettante, for she entered the clothing industry 34 years ago, and she takes a certain pride in letting you know it. She also knows very well what she wants and where she is going. Over a cup of tea, while checking from time to time some of the charming dresses that were to be shown the next day, she spoke to us of her studies that began at the Academy of Fine Arts in Karlsruhe, continued at Munich, and later in Berlin at the famous Reimann school where the arts of fashion designing were also taught. In the Berlin of the boom period, Mrs. Haller worked in the clothing industry ; she left Germany in 1934 and settled in Zurich where she worked as a « modeliste » in the firm which she and Mr. Haller took over in 1938.

After her husband's death, Mrs. Haller continued her career by creating collections that are the joy of connoisseurs for their subtle and refined elegance. She never stops drawing and designing, since in addition to designing the models of her dresses she continues to cultivate the fine arts in her leisure moments. It is only when she has finished designing her dresses that she starts looking for the fabrics with which she has dreamt of carrying them out.

Mrs. Alice Canzani of the firm of Canzani & Co., Zurich, was not in the trade but her desire to help her husband, the interest she took in his work, the continual contact with members of his staff, suppliers and clients served her by way of apprenticeship. As Mrs. Canzani is an outdoor type and very keen on skiing, it is not surprising that she has gone in mainly for the manufacture of sports suits and coats, and, with particular pleasure and undeniable success, for the creation of smart and gay models for skiing and after ski wear. Before having them manufactured, she tries them out herself on the ski runs of the fashionable international winter sports resorts. This and her frequent trips all over western Europe give her inspiration and the new ideas that are becoming more and more sought after by winter sports enthusiasts. Mrs. Canzani spends most of her time in her search for perfect cut and original ideas, to such an extent in fact that little time is left for her to enjoy her bungalow by the lakeside or her favourite hobby, photography.

Alice Canzani

Alice Meyer

Another completely different atmosphere : Mrs. Alice Meyer, of the firm of Willy Meyer Co. Ltd. in Zurich, founded the firm in 1923 with her husband who had already been in the trade for 25 years. She had served a dressmaking apprenticeship, then worked for two years on the practical side to learn the tricks of the trade. The firm, which began with one assistant, three months later had 20, which is a remarkable achievement for the time ; the original seamstresses moreover are still with the firm. Mrs. Meyer now handles the purchases, the creation and the manufacture with her son. She goes to Paris regularly each season but she is also receptive to other influences, such as those of the United States, Florence and Rome. She constantly supervises the work of her «modelistes» and checks the cut of each model on the «toiles». Under her guidance, the firm creates youthful dresses, but Mrs. Meyer thinks too of her own needs and the needs of other women of her age, and has thus developed a speciality for a style of dress specially designed for women who are old enough to be grandmothers. Mrs. Meyer herself has three grandchildren, of whom she is obviously very fond. In a few years—and she is looking forward immensely to the time—she will be able to create dresses for her own grandchild who is fast becoming a young lady. Let us not forget to mention too that Mrs. Meyer loves her garden and her flowers—which often suggest different harmonies of colours to her—and that whenever she can find the time she writes poetry and reviews as well as short sketches for drawing-room theatricals and charity fêtes.

Mrs. Simone Marty of the firm of Marty & Co., Zurich (newest of the firms in this branch), is herself young and charming. A native of the French-speaking part of Switzerland, she served her dressmaking apprenticeship in Lausanne, then worked as a «petite main», seamstress, «première de table» and forewoman, cutter and «modeliste»; she was even a mannequin and saleswoman. But her great ambition was to have her own salon in order to be able to mould the finest fabrics into attractive models. When she got married she was at last able to achieve this dream with the help of her husband and to open up a go-ahead concern which has developed extremely rapidly, the number of workers having risen from 16 in 1949 to 140 in 1956 (including the seamstresses working at home and the embroiderers). The splendid fabrics and lengths of luxury materials that she uses show that Mrs. Marty does not know or rather does not want to know how to economise. She confesses herself quite unashamedly that she is extravagant and needs a stern adviser to clip the wings of her fantasy from time to time. This is also the reason why she buys fabrics—very often created exclusively for her firm—in collaboration with her husband. And then with a sureness of touch, a quite personal pleasure, she creates youthful models that are as popular in America as they are in Europe. And this is probably the secret of her success : she takes as much pleasure in making her models as others have in wearing them.

Simone Marty

Charm and bright vivacity is the impression one receives on meeting Mrs. Lili Grossenbacher of the firm of H. Grossenbacher & Co., Zurich. One feels too, as one talks with her, that she is fired with an extraordinary optimism, firmly based on a sound knowledge of the tastes and wishes of her customers. For Mrs. Grossenbacher did not come to the ready-to-wear industry through dressmaking but through the sales side. A native of the French-speaking part of the country, she had however already acquired a taste for fine clothes while visiting her aunt, who was a dressmaker in Brussels ; on her return to Zurich on the outbreak of war, she worked as a saleswoman in a big clothing store, in this way gaining experience of one of the sides of her future profession. This experience proved most useful after she married Mr. Grossenbacher who had opened a knitwear and jersey factory in Zurich. In spite of difficulties caused by the war, the uncertainty of business and some heavy setbacks, the firm prospered ; Mrs. Grossenbacher's experience of the retail sales side was of great assistance to her when the firm took up the manufacture of dresses.

As everyone in her profession, Mrs. Grossenbacher is too busy to have any real leisure, so she cannot, as she would like, play bridge, but she finds the necessary relaxation in reading, embroidering and playing the piano, her favourite composers being Liszt and Chopin.

In Zurich we find once more the traditional atmosphere at the firm of El-El Co. Ltd., headed by Mrs. Herz and Mrs. Mandoni—two sisters who together have been running this internationally known firm for many years.

Both of them served their apprenticeships in haute couture and long experience has enabled them to form a distinctive taste with regard to women's fashions. The firm was founded in 1912 by Mr. Léon Lévy who retired in 1933. The two sisters then took over the firm with an associate, Mr. Sylvain Bloch, who, to their great regret, died in 1949.

Mrs. Herz and Mrs. Mandoni go to Paris 4 to 6 times every year, accompanied by a team of experienced employees, to catch the spirit and tone of the new fashions.

Afterwards they go over their plans together and divide out the work according to their individual preferences. They also go to great lengths to find the finest fabrics and accessories, a vitally important point if a collection is to meet with the approval of buyers from all parts of the world. They make approximately 200 dresses for each of the two big annual collections and a hundred for the two between-season collections.

These two ladies are moreover justifiably proud of their work and the success of their collections which are well known for their elegance and perfect finish, resulting in large sales in Switzerland and big exports.

Some twenty five years ago a foreign buyer said, « The Swiss are capable of making excellent cheese, but they will never make dresses smart enough for export. »

Is it perhaps this hasty judgement that made them want to take up his challenge and make him eat his words ?

Terry Herz

Nelly Mandoni

Felicie Kriesemer

Mrs. Félicie Kriesemer of Walter Kriesemer & Co., St. Gall, can be considered as a career-woman in the best sense of the words. This doctor's daughter, brought up for no other profession than to be the lady of the house, was suddenly plunged from a life of ease with her husband and children into a bitter struggle for life in which she had to work hard to help provide for her family. Assisted by her eldest daughter, she took up sewing and in this way laid the foundations of a well-known dress and blouse factory, which today employs more than 200 men and women in 4 establishments and regularly exports a large part of its output since the entry of her son Mr. Kriesemer into the business. It was the slump in the embroidery industry, in which her husband occupied a prominent position, that brought about this sudden change in Mrs. Kriesemer's way of life.

With exemplary decision and willpower, this woman, then 30 years old and a mother of three children, decided to learn all about dressmaking at the St. Gall School of Textiles and Fashion. In this way Mrs. Kriesemer was able to succeed in her venture and she always shows great enthusiasm as she tries to inculcate her sound professional knowledge and innate sense of quiet elegance and quality into her seamstresses and apprentices, most of whom moreover, coming from families engaged in embroidery for many generations, possess that love of work well done by hand that makes them invaluable assistants. Mrs. Kriesemer visits the United States personally each year and finds there a freshness and a breadth of ideas which she expresses perfectly in her models.
