LONDON

Among the most popular Swiss cottons in the British ranges for next season are Swiss cotton crêpons used either plain or printed by a number of blouse manufacturers such as Maxton Blouse Co., Matisse of Bond Street, John Craig, Elsie Whitely, etc., while Simon Massey also uses them for dresses. Swiss cotton piqués are also extremely popular and Bob Schulz as well as other manufacturers have used a waffle piqué for dresses, coats, and dress and coat ensembles. The prints too are very much in evidence because of their extremely good designs and colour composition. A printed Panama woven cotton appears in a shift dress in the Dorville range, while leisure wear manufacturers such as T. Woodruffe, Franklyn Fashions, Matchmates and Caprice have all used Swiss prints on cotton satins, which have the advantage of looking like silk but being washable.

Swiss embroideries appear again in many collections, among others in the form of trimming on a two-piece by London Town and in the collections of Jean Allen, Marcus, Nettie Vogues, Dellwood Models and many others.
