FEDERAL.

SWITZERLAND AND THE RUSSO-GERMAN NON-AGGRESSION PACT.

Pessimism is the keynote of Switzerland's reaction to the Russo-German non-aggression pact. "The situation which was coming to a head to Germany's disadvantage has been instantly reversed," says the "Neue Zürcher Zeitung."

The question of what price Germany had to pay for the agreement is asked by the "Bund."

7,000,000 VISITORS TO SWISS NATIONAL EXHIBITION.

The outstanding success of the Swiss National Exhibition at Zurich is emphasized by the fact that the figure of 7,000,000 visitors was reached on Sunday last, making the total number to date nearly twice the population of Switzerland.

The patriotic demonstrations in connection with the Exhibition become more spectacular from day to day. Last Saturday and Sunday the Swiss national costume festival was attended by a crowd of 250,000, the largest crowd assembled in one place that Zurich, a city of 350,000 inhabitants, has ever seen. Delegations from the 22 Cantons in their picturesque costumes took part in the parade.

SWISS GRAND PRIX.

The motor race for the Swiss Grand Prix took place in Berne on Sunday last without mishap. Fifty thousand spectators lined the course, and there were 17 entrants for the race. Lang (Germany) driving a Mercedes Benz, won the race in 1 hour 24 minutes 47.6 seconds at an average speed of 94.7 m.p.h. The second and third places were also taken by Mercedes cars driven by Caracciola (Germany) and von Brauchitsch (Germany).

SWISS ELECTRIFICATION FIGURES.

The Swiss Federal Railways now have 2,149 route km. (1,335 miles) electrified, equivalent to 73 per cent. of the total length of the system. The electrified lines carry 87 per cent. of the train-mileage and 94 per cent. of the gross ton-miles. During 1938 the current consumption was 539 million kWh for traction, of which about 93 million kWh was produced by the Etzel hydro-electric plant opened in 1937. The Federal Railways now have 494 electric locomotives as against 178 belonging to Swiss private railways, the largest being the 12,000 h.p. locomotive for the Gotthard line.

GERMAN ABUSE OF SWISS MAIL.

It is announced from Berne that the German propaganda leaflets posted in Switzerland and addressed to French citizens in France were placed in open envelopes of various shades and colours and dropped in different post boxes in the frontier region between Basle and Constance.

One of these envelopes having fallen, its contents were revealed. The leaflets dealt with the Danzig question in such a manner that the Swiss Post Office considered their circulation was illegal and the seizure of all these messages was ordered. So far about 6,000 envelopes and leaflets have been seized.

SWITZERLAND'S LOSSES.

The "National-Zeitung" of Basle estimates the financial losses Switzerland has suffered by the incorporation of Austria and Czecho-Slovakia into the Reich at £15,000,000 a year in capital and £600,000 in interest in the case of Austria, while losses on Swiss investments in Czecho-Slovakia are given as £6,750,000 capital and £300,000 interest.

NEW SWISS MINISTER TO JAPAN.

The Federal Council has appointed M. Camille Gorgé, Counsellor of Legation, at present at the Political Department in Berne, to the post of Swiss Minister in Tokio.

GERMAN MILITARY MACHINE LANDS IN SWITZERLAND.

A German military machine effected a forced landing near Fraubrunnen (Ct. Berne). The pilot, according to his version, lost his way, and was forced down owing to lack of petrol.

The Swiss military authorities, after having investigated the case, allowed the pilot to return to Germany. He was accompanied, on his return journey, by two Swiss military machines as far as the Swiss frontier.

PROFESSOR DR. KARL BURCKHARDT.

Professor Karl Burckhardt, High Commissioner of the Free State of Danzig, and a compatriot of ours, has suddenly come into the limelight of international politics, and it might be interesting to mention a few facts about his responsible office and his personality.

To understand the position of Dr. Burckhardt it is necessary to turn back the pages of history for a few years, to the Treaty of Versailles, which, in 1919, separated Danzig from the rest of Germany and constituted it a free city. It was the usual compromise. Poland had asked that this great port, her natural outlet to the sea, should be included in the territory which had been ceded to her. The peace-makers felt reluctant to place a city 96 per cent. of whose population was German under other sovereignty. They therefore made an innovation, and announced that Danzig should have a separate constitution, free to elect its own Parliament, but subject to the supervision of the League of Nations, who were to appoint a resident High Commissioner.

Responsibility for the working of the constitution was to be vested in the three countries of Great Britain, France and Sweden, to whom the High Commissioner was to report at regular intervals, and whose advice he was to seek should difficulties arise. General Haking, a British officer who had seen service in Egypt, was appointed the first Commissioner in 1920 and served until 1923, when he was succeeded by Mr. H. S. MacDonnell, and later by Dr. van Hamel, of Denmark; Count Gravina, of Italy; Mr. Helmar Rosting, of Denmark, and in 1933 by Mr. Sean Lister, of Eire. The latter was appointed Deputy Secretary-General of the League of Nations in September, 1936, and was compelled to resign his work in Danzig.

Considerable difficulties then arose. For the first few years of the new régime, Germany had raised little objection. She was too busily employed with the reconstruction of her other territory to trouble much about Danzig, but by 1935 had begun to realise that Danzig was of vital importance. It had always been the main outlet for East Prussia, her greatest port on the Baltic, and a valuable territory both from naval and military points of view. It became apparent that the work of the High Commissioner was likely to be one of the greatest difficulty. The League were, therefore, in a quandary as to the most suitable occupant of the post. Obviously he had to be a man who would be respected both by the Poles and the Germans, but would at the same time be able to insist on the constitution being fully observed. An Englishman or a Frenchman would not have been suitable.

Fortunately the League made an inspired choice. They had received much assistance from time to time from Professor Burckhardt, who was in charge of the School for International Law Studies at Geneva. On more than one occasion he had attended meetings of the League to interpret vexed questions of international law, and suggest how conflicting interests could best be solved. Resident in the town where the League held its sessions he had, moreover, come to be regarded as a most generous host. His house was always open for those informal discussions which play so important a part in such conferences. It was particularly remembered that on one occasion, in 1933, when Dr. Goebbels paid his only visit to Geneva, there were complaints that the German delegates were being ignored or treated with less respect than others. Dr. Burckhardt was appealed to. He invited Dr. Goebbels, the other German delegates, and those from Great Britain and France, to dinner. Tempers were soothed, and it has since been stated that it was the happiest party ever held in Geneva.

No surprise was, therefore, occasioned when in February, 1937, the League invited Dr. Burckhardt to accept appointment as their High Commissioner at Danzig. It was a task which the majority of men would have shirked, but Dr. Burckhardt felt it was his duty to undertake the burden. As the looker-on who sees most of the game he had realised that sooner or later the system was bound to collapse unless very strong measures were taken to support it. Not that he felt the necessity for force, or a heavy hand. It was a situation which would demand the utmost tact, and of that he was possessed in an unusual degree. There was considerable relief on all sides when he intimated his acceptance. On April 13, 1937, he arrived to take over the duties.

Karl Burckhardt had been born in Basle, in Switzerland, in 1891, of Swiss nationality, but from parents who could trace German descent. He was one of the vast number of the mixed races who combine to make up the Swiss population, but even as a boy he had learned that peoples of different nationalities can live in the greatest amity. He appreciated that what could be done in Switzerland must be possible in other parts of the world. If only everyone, he once stated, could sink their own petty differences for the common good the world would be a much happier place.

Burckhardt proved a keen student, taking honours degrees in legal subjects at the Zurich University, and later practising as an international lawyer in Paris. At the age of 30 he was invited to return to Zurich as Professor of Law, and quickly earned a world reputation for his detailed knowledge of the subject. Many times he was invited to the Hague to give an opinion on the many problems which were submitted to the Hague Tribunal. Later he helped to establish the now famous International Institute for International Law Studies at Geneva.

Above all, Dr. Burckhardt is a scholar, but he is by no means a highbrow. He is at home in any company, a born mixer, and quick to make friends. He has proved at Danzig that he is equally at home with the Poles and with the Nazis. They all hold him in the utmost respect. Even Herr Hitler, whom he has met on more than one occasion, referred to Dr. Burckhardt as a man of the greatest tact. He is a man of reflective mind, a typical diplomat who knows when to speak and when to maintain silence. He has his own shrewd opinions as to how a peaceful solution of the present situation may be found, but he feels that his position is rendered more complicated by the fact that he represents a League of Nations which is not nearly so representative as it was when he was appointed.

In Danzig, during Dr. Burckhardt's term of office, the internal position has been amazingly quiet. No matter what the outcome, Europe owes much to the man who has sat on smouldering flames for two years and prevented an enormous conflagration.

LOCAL.

BERNE.

Dr. Karl Liechti has recently celebrated his 40th anniversary as a member of the staff of the Jungfrau Railway. Dr. Liechti, after having occupied some minor posts in the administration, was appointed manager in 1904. In 1916 he was also entrusted with the management of the Wengernalp Railway.

During the last 40 years he has rendered eminent services to this world-famous mountain railway, and the University of Berne honoured him by bestowing on him the degree of doctor honoris causa.

LUCERNE.

A monument to the memory of the late Federal-Councillor Dr. Joseph Zemp, will be inaugurated on Sunday, August 27th, in Entlebuch. Dr. Zemp was a member of the Federal Government from 1891-1908, he was President of the Swiss Confederation in 1895 and 1902.

ST. GALL.

The death is reported from St. Gall, of M. Edwin Ruckstuhl, a former "Landammann" of the canton of St. Gall, at the age of 71.

The deceased was a member of the cantonal government from 1906-1936.

M. Jean Leutenegger-Bösch, President of the Board, and Manager of the Embroidery firm G. H. Graf & Co. A.G., has died in Rebstein at the age of 67. M. Leutenegger was in the Embroidery trade for the last 45 years.

BASLE.

Dr. Bernhard Jacggi, who in 1933 retired from the management of the "Verbandes schweizerischer Konsumvereine," has celebrated his 70th birthday.

A few years after joining the administration of the "VSK" he was elected, in 1902, a member of the Grand Council of the canton of Basle, of which he was a member until 1916. From 1911-1917 he belonged to the National Council, during which time he rendered great services in various parliamentary commissions. In 1929, the University of Basle bestowed on him the degree of doctor honoris causa for the eminent services which he rendered to our country.

IMPRESSIONS.

I have just returned from a very happy and interesting holiday in that so lovely country—Switzerland.

It was not my first visit, therefore I was able to take my eyes off the mountains, and look at the things around me. The first was the Exhibition at Zurich. I expect many people have described this in full, with more wealth of description than I shall hope to emulate, but to me it was just grand. I made many visits, and even now have not seen it as thoroughly as I would have liked, but time was against me. Its beauty—the clever way it has been adapted to the lake, without spoiling the lakeside—and the interesting pavilions are things that need a book of their own, and this is not within my scope.

What really impressed me beyond words were the "Umzugs." The first I saw—from the top of a taxi—was the Fribourg "Umzug." To be quite honest, I had not placed very much importance on these processions, having in mind several that I had seen in London: but on returning to Bellevue from visiting a friend, I found all the roads blocked and the procession in progress. My first feeling was one of annoyance, especially as I am rather small and couldn't see a thing. Then, a taxi driver, seeing my plight, offered me a view from the top of his taxi. That man! So absolutely indicative of the whole race—kind, generous, helpful to the foreigner and sympathetic. But unfortunately I had missed most of the affair, and saw only the end. This was sufficient though to make me determined to see the next one properly. Therefore, the next Saturday morning saw me fighting my way through the crowds to get a really good view of the Schaffhausen Umzug. Of the individual efforts I have no words. There were the girls in their lovely cantonal "Tracht," with happy smiling faces radiating good health and contented living. There were carts containing the wheat and field produce of this productive canton—the exhibits from the great watch-making industry—the amazing uses of aluminium, and hosts of others, not excluding the wine! Then came the soldiers, wearing costumes dating from the long years ago, to the light, hygienic uniform of the present day, and as they marched I thought how glad I was that I belonged to a friendly country. Pity those who fight against such men. As one they marched shoulder to shoulder, and I could imagine them dying for their homes and country in the same way. And mostly they were simple country folk, who plough their fields, and gather their harvests; who live from day to day simply and quietly, with yet time to spare to look at their beautiful country. How nobly they uphold the dignity of labour! And I, a townswoman born and bred, felt how much I had missed in the hurry and scurry of town life. These busy people, making haste slowly, how much more from Life do they get! And while thus dreaming, the procession wound slowly out of sight, leaving one, at least, thinking how fine a model to the whole world is Switzerland!

CITY SWISS CLUB.

The winter session opens on 5th September when we understand the committee expect most of the members to turn up for the first monthly meeting of the season. We were told by the Secretary in June that the committee were very gratified that their ambition of passing the 100 mark for a monthly meeting had been reached, and this was the sort of encouragement they needed to devote the summer months in preparing a most attractive winter season.

We were wondering whether the committee had found time during this long "holiday" to devise something new which would beat their previous record. We have endeavoured to find out by phoning the Secretary, and he tells us that he has a REAL surprise once more. He has just come back from Switzerland where he has managed to arrange with the authorities to lend the Club the famous film which helped the Zurich Exhibition to reach the unexpected success it has attained. He has also been promised, we hear, the loan of a film entitled "Our Switzerland," depicting some of the beauties of our Motherland. He cannot give us detailed information yet, as he has just arrived in London and has certain negotiations to complete to be sure to be ready by 5th September, but by the information we have received we know the matter is in very good hands, and we feel sure that every member and friend of the City Swiss Club will make a point of reserving the evening of Tuesday, 5th September, to go to Paganì's.

The President has now recovered from his serious illness, and is feeling like a 25 year old, we are told by the Secretary.

No doubt all members will wish to meet each other and foregather, particularly in these days when all Swiss will want to be together, and they will bring all their good English friends to enjoy the treat in store.

May we point out that the attendance is sure to be very great, so book early—just phone Mr. Boehringer (Clerkenwell 2321/2).

Reserve your seats now for yourself and friends.

PERSONAL.

The many friends of Mr. & Mrs. A. Stauffer, of 11, Carlton Road, Putney, S.W.15, will sympathise with them in their bereavement, Mrs. Stauffer's father having died in London, at the age of 67.

SHUT UP THAT COOKERY BOOK

When you begin to feel that there isn't a new food idea in all the wide world, it's high time you shut up the cookery book and said firmly to your husband, "Let's go to the Myllet to-night." There you will taste a meal which is a real joy served with that care and attention which good food deserves. You will feel rested and refreshed, so that the music of Jesse Watson and his trio soon tempts you out on to the dance floor. Good food, good wine, pleasant music and a friendly cheerful atmosphere put you in the right mood to enjoy yourself. And when the evening draws to a close, and the bill turns out to be only a modest 5/6d. a head you will make up your mind that it must not be long before you come again.
