Mr. Rubattel, president of the Confederation and chief of the department of public economy, has replied in Parliament to a question on American duties on Swiss watches. He emphasized that the United States was taking about 30 per cent of Swiss watch production, and that any rise in American duties might be a blow to the industry and to the 60,000 workers employed in it, especially as business now shows a tendency towards slowing down. The Swiss Government was trying to obtain some fair agreement with the United States.

Mr. Rubattel hoped that the United States would understand the urgent necessity for coming to an agreement. The raising of American duties on Swiss watches to protect the prosperous industry in the United States might be a fatal blow to American-Swiss trade relations.
