BALLET IN SWITZERLAND. By L. Franc Scheuer.

The great vogue that Switzerland had enjoyed abroad since as early as Rousseau's "Back to Nature" doctrine and Marie-Antoinette's dairy practises had reached its zenith, when Marie Taglioni danced La daitière Suisse and the Paris Opera mounted idyl after idyl in the pastoral vein opera monnter day after day in the pastoral ven of salomon Gessner. Shortly afterwards a general reaction to this sentimental attitude set in and condenned not only alp-horn and yodel, Allemand and Laendler, but Swiss art as a whole, about which it knew little at all.

From this moment date most of the difficulties the Swiss artist, whatever his mode of expression, experienced in familiarizing his work; difficulties that were greatly augmented by the linguistic differences of the land and by the peculiar situa-Slavic and Latin cultures. On every side the artistic integrity of the Swiss met with ridicale, arcustic integrity of the Swiss met with ridicile, professional distrust or preconceived associations. His efforts were crowned with success only when he stooped to assume a foreign nationality, and in this case Switzerland gained no recognition.

A striking parallel might be drawn between this latter state and that of the Dance in England until a few years ago, but since it is with Swiss dancing that we intend to deal, having recently spent several months on Swiss soil, we will hasten on to it.

There is, first of all, no contemporary form of dancing that might be labelled "Swiss," despite the fact that both Dalcroze, who is Swiss, and von Laban, whom rumour describes as Czecho-Slovakian with meridional antecedents, sowed the first seeds of their respective methods in Switzerland.

One of the most plausible reasons for this, according to Mme. Suzanne Perrottet, an authori-tative teacher of dancing and gymnastics in Zürich and one of von Laban's early associates in the days when the present ballet master of the Berlin Staatsoper was living in Ascona, is that pieces found were still legible the carved names pieces found were still legible the carved names of Agassiz, Nicolet, and Stengel, ensuring their trustworthy identification. The block had early quitted the crest of the moraine, and glided along its left flank down to the bordering ravine. Starting from a fixed point on the Abschwung, where the two great affluents, the Finsteraar and Lauteraar glaciers join to produce the Unteraar glacier, the positions at each of the epochs, 1842, 1884, 1899 and 1922 were found to be respectively 0.9, 3.2, 3.8, and 4.6 kilometers. These corres-pond to the following velocities: 1842-1846, 74.0 metres per annum; 1846-1884, 51.5; 1884-1899, 40.0; and 1899-1922, 32.2. 40.0; and 1899 1922, 32.2.

The diminution in velocity is partly due to the drive to the left from the middle of the glacier, and partly to the diminution of the glacier, the end of which was continually in retreat from 1872 to 1922. We have thus a continuous record for eighty years of the movement of this very interesting glacier. And the work of Professor Mercanton is only just in time. For owing to the completion is only just in time. For owing to the completion in 1931 of the barrage work at the Grimsel (for the provision of immense electric power stations at Handret, Boden and Innerkirchen), and the consequent very large increase in the size of the lake now three and a half miles long, the end of the link provide the statistic large rescaled the Unteraar glacier has actually been reached by the waters. Cliffs of ice twenty or more metres high were standing up directly out of the lake the whole time from August 19th to mid-October, 1932, the appearance being exactly like that of a Norwegian fjord. This attack by water has naturally acused fusion and undermining of the ice, no less than fifty metres of refreat of the glacier being the direct result. The ice cliffs were of a wonderfully clear azure-blue colour, and of a wonderfully clear azure-blue colour, and formed a very beautiful spectacle during the sum-mer months. The old Grimsel hospice, so well remembered for its resonant sleep-preventing wooden cubelet-rooms, has disappeared for ever, the lake covering its site, and a new hospice has been built on the rocks well above the new lake level. Besides the loss of 206,500 cubic metres of the metric due to the lake the Unterprogram during its shout due to the lake, the Unteraar glacier has lost in the last two years another 2,373,000 cubic metres of its volume. All this renders it the more fortunate that Professor Mercanton's completion of the work of Agassiz should have occurred before this large disturbance of the con-ditions ditions.

Before proceedings to give the latest results Before proceedings to give the latest results of the official measurements, a few words about the new refined methods are due. And first as to enneigement and its determination by nivo-metry. On a lovely antumn day, September 22nd, 1902, three members of the Diablerets section of the Swiss Alpine Club, Messrs. Mercanton, Lacombe and Ramelet, painted the first nivo-metric scale in the Alps on the Glacier d'Orny, the realization of a suggestion of Forel in 1890. (To be continued).

the Swiss has greater proclivity for sports than for æsthetics, for the "Hosenlupf," let us say, which is a form of wrestling that consists of "swinging" one's opponent by the trouser leg, than for elementary exercises at the barre. In his turn, the Swiss dance critic, M. Edouard Szamba, suggests that the political history of Switzerland with its democratic trend may have had a great deal to do in preventing ballet traditions from taking root in Helvetia as they did in Italy and France. Not only was court life, so salutary to the Ballet in these two countries, lacking, M. Szamba explains, but like wise regular theatrical troupes, so that until a century ago even the largest Swiss cities were dependent upon ambulating companies of comedy dependent upon ambulating companies of comedy or ballet.

Nevertheless, a varied and ardent chore-graphical activity is pursued in these same cities to-day, stimulated in certain cases by the experi-mental, even sectarian, tendencies of Central Europe, but modulated often by the tact and measure for which the Swiss are known.

Centre of gravity of the Dance in Switzerland Centre of gravity of the Dance in Switzerland, Zürich, for instance, has frequently furnished Berlin with representative exponents of modern dancing, or in times of social upheaval, such as Germany is now experiencing, has harboured those in search of refuge or artistic independence. In the first group we discover the names of Max Terpis, former ballet-master Unter den Linden; Berthe Trümpy, prominent Berlin demagag; and the late Vera Skoronel; in the second those of Mary Wigman and the Sacharoffs, who made Zürich their headquarters during the war. The actual head of the municinal ballet of

The actual head of the municipal ballet of Zürich is Hellmuth Zehnpfenning, who evolved a great deal of theatrical routine, if not creative energy, as leading solo dancer of the Städtische Oper of Berlin. He disposes of a comparatively limited troupe, indifferently formed, insufficiently remunerated (where is this not the case?), obliged as in all municipal theatres of Switzerland to as in an interpret function of  $S_{12}$  in the participate in operatic performances as well as in operatic and ballet. These difficulties made themselves felt during a production of Stravinsky's  $L'Oiseau \ de \ Feu$  we had the opportunity of witnessing in Zürich.

A second troupe to present occasional ballet A second troupe to present occasional ballet and to tour Switzerland under the banner of the Zürich Stadttheater is now being composed, par-tially of German dancers, by Zürich's well-known humoriste, Mme. Trudi Schoop. An interesting experiment that will show us whether the ballet-mistress of Fridolin en route — the work that gained Mme. Schoop recognition at the competi-ion of the International Archives of the Dance tion of the International Archives of the Dance – is capable of converting her talent for comedy portraiture into more serious channels.

The Mohr-Macciacchini School, with a decided trend fowards expressionism, is also settled in Zürich, while further we find Thusnelda Walter, whose original compositions won honourable men-tion in the recent competition at Warsaw.

Basel presents a double and unexpected aspect with the ballet of the Stadtheater on one side and the avant-garde group of the Tanzstudio Wulff on the other. The former is directed by a new ballet mistress from Mme. Eduardowa's Berlin school, Frl. Ruth Sendler, whose repertoire for the coming year includes such widely diversified works as Coppelia, Gartenfest in Schönbrunn (Haydn) and a new ballet by the Swiss composer, Pierre Maurice, Tanzlegendchen, after Gottfried Pierre Maurice, Tanzlegendchen, after Gottfried Keller.<sup>1</sup> The latter with Käthe Wulff as directress and Marietta von Meyenburg as choregrapher specialises in fresh presentations of ballets of confirmed merit, such as Mercure (Satie) and Le Bal (Rieti), in which Laban technique is reinforced by selected elements from the Classical School. Marie-Eve Kreis, whom Paris saw for the first time last ware half from this school time last year, hails from this school.

To this by no means complete list it is fitting to add the names of several movements whose endeavours have recruited sympathy in Switzerland. In Dornach we find the late Rudolph Steiner's Academy of Eurhythmics. Emmi Sauer-Steiner's Academy of Eurhythmics. Emmi Sauer-beck, long associated with the Swiss theorician of dancing, Gustave Fueter, has her studio in Bern. At the other end of Switzerland, in Geneva, which likewise boasts the Ballet School of Mme. Missol-Rivaux, Jacques Dalcroze has centred his activity, while in Ascona may be found Charlotta Bara's Teatro San Materno, a regular laboratory for young dancers for young dancers.
