GENEVA—HOTEL BEAU-RIVAGE RENOVATION

The guest-book of the Beau-Rivage Hotel, whose first pages are dated 1865, is adorned with the signatures of most of the crowned heads who have visited Geneva during the past century. Today, after a year of intensive work, the Beau-Rivage presents a well rejuvenated face as a result of important transformations on the reception floor and on the ground level. In effect, two restaurants, one superimposed on the other, have been built on the Quai du Mont-Blanc looking out over the lake and the imposing range of the Alps. The alterations in what was formerly the terrace have enabled the architects to install an indoor restaurant with a capacity of 250 seats, or with room for 600 people standing at a reception. It is, moreover, divisible into two or three smaller rooms. On the terrace is an open-air dining-room, covered by an awning and heated by infrared lamps, capable of accommodating eighty guests, but it is downstairs that the most spectacular changes have been made with the establishment of a huge grill-room, the "Puss-in-Boots", decorated in the Louis XIII style of the time when Perrault wrote his famous story. More than one hundred places are available to the clientèle, plus about thirty at the adjoining bar. French specialities, meats and fowl boiled or rôtisserie-roasted, and all varieties of fresh sea-food flown in daily are the delicacies offered in this distinguished setting. Finally, on the sidewalk in front of the grill-room there will be a covered and heated café. This completes an ensemble which entailed the installation of new kitchens, efficient air-conditioning and other improvements.

GREAT SAFETY IN A SMALL DEVICE

Wall sockets for electrical appliances, especially when located near floor level as is so often the case in modern buildings, are known to be very dangerous for small children. A number of parents are therefore obliged to cover these sockets with adhesive paper or tape, etc., a precaution which is far from being 100% safe. A Geneva firm sells both at home and abroad, under the name of "Votless" a small patented plastic device which effectively seals off electrical sockets when not in use, without either dirtying or damaging them; the "Votless" is easy to insert and easy to remove, but holds firmly enough in position to resist the efforts of small children's hands.

It is a gadget as effective as it is simple . . . it just needed someone to think of it.
